Observations:

October 2012 - Tyler Toffoli has taken well to the AHL in his rookie season, so far. He's put up five points in his first six games.
What's impressive is that he's doing this on special teams.
Two of his goals were powerplay goals and the other he scored shorthanded.
A pretty impressive start for any rookie in the AHL.
Tim Graveline

March 2012 – Toffoli is a small player, but as the former director of NHL central scouting said, Toffoli makes up for it in skill and effort. Toffoli has long been praised by Ottawa 67s head coach for his hockey sense and ability to play effectively as both a shooter and playmaker. Toffoli has led his team in scoring for the past two seasons, including leading the league in points last season. Toffoli may very well win the OHL scoring race for the second year in a row if he can maintain his current points per game average of 1.58.

Fantasy Outlook : A-

Toffoli is a top six forward and if he can't crack the Kings top six next year, he would be best served playing big minutes with the King's AHL team in Manchester for a season.
